No. 424.—The following resolution of the Government of India is republished:—

HOME DEPARTMENT.

JOINT.

Serial, No. 28th April 1913.

No. 83.—During the session of the Imperial Legislative Council at Delhi in the said month of 1913-14, a resolution was adopted recommending that a joint Commission of officials of one official be appointed to investigate the whole system of jail administration and to suggest improvements in the light of the experience of the West. Such a course is consistent with the manner in which prison management has developed in this country. Four general enquiries have already been held, in the years 1859, 1864, 1867 and 1869-70, respectively, into the whole question of the administration of justice. These have, of course, been numerous independent discussions and discussions of policy on general points, of a general character or in relation particularly to individual provinces, but the main lines of advance followed have been the result of the reports thus submitted. Thus, therefore, in the first instance for advancing such a procedure now, namely, that it has yielded beneficial results in the past and that a considerable period of time has elapsed since there was last held a general enquiry.

5. But an even stronger ground than this exists. Without in any way desiring to underestimate the valuable results which have accrued from the labours of these different commissions, and while fully cognisant of the great advances which have been made in just management, thanks to the energetic efforts of local Governments, the Government-General in Council recognizes that, as a general statement, it is not unfair to say that attention has rarely been directed attention to the improvement of justice administration on lines and standards which in recent times have undergone considerable modification, at any rate in the West. This was, indeed, essentially the case. When an attempt was first made in 1818 to deal with the subject comprehensively and thoroughly, the foundations of an efficient system had practically still to be laid. Diversity of practice in different provinces was the rule rather than the exception, and the complete reform was in accordance with the latest enquiry of 1851-53. The Prison Act of 1854 (Act IX of 1854) was the last recognition by the Legislature that in certain respects uniformly must be insisted upon, and its enactment was the result of Sir James Mackenzie's recommendations, as subsequently re-examined in 1851-53 by a Departmental Committee.

In appointing the committee of 1859-60, the Government of India (proceedings recorded Nos. 415-416, dated 15th Dec. 1859) expressly stated that they had, as well as to reconsider the principles laid down by the three preceding investigations, and so great has been the liberty to be made up as what may be termed the materials of any prison system, e.g., an efficient jail service, proper buildings and out-buildings, suitable forms of labour, and the classification of prison offences and punishments, etc., that progress in these directions has absorbed much of the attention of the public officers, in whom the control of the department is now entrusted. To all these departments a great advance has been achieved, but a review of the development of prison administration in the various provinces, in order to see what has been accomplished and what still remains to be done would naturally form part of any further enquiry now held.

6. But, even and above this, something more is required. Even on the subject of the treatment of prisoners have advanced rapidly in recent years largely under the stimulus of the geographical International Conference of which the first was held in London in 1873 and the latest in Australia in 1910, and the development of these bodies point to the importance of reference to a main end to be sought for in a large number of cases. The Prisoners of Offences Act, 1871, the Prevention of Offences Act, 1898, and the Children's Act of the latter year are all instances of modern English legislation on the subject, of which the Revised system (with the other two Revised Amendments) and the arrangements given to Discharged Prisoners Act form the most conspicuous results. The Government of India are well aware of the differences in prison practice in England and India, and they do not desire in any way to imply that all the latest experiments of the West are necessarily suitable for introduction in this East. Let they say at once that the subject will merit divided expert consideration if the present system in this country is to be saved from the reproach that it is failing to keep pace with modern ideas. It is true that in various provinces experiments with the Revised system and with progressive methods as applied to criminal tribes are being made, but action is being taken by provinces individually, and the creation and co-ordination of the results achieved are likely to ensure that lines of future policy are defined and results be avoided in the early stages. Even uniformity of procedure in all provinces is so far from impossible, and possibly undesirable, but, with attention in degree and detail to varying local conditions there is no reason why the general principles governing the treatment of criminals should not be the same throughout the country.

7. These consider the very important subject of transportation, about which much has been written in the past and since a discussion of the merits of which it is not proposed to enter, but recent supplies and events have led the Government of India to doubt whether the administration of the Andamans as a penal settlement is not amenable, with advantage, of material change, or whether in fact the maintenance of the settlement in its present state is in itself expedient. As inquiry in this direction may be expected to yield results of special value.

8. Subsequent to the discussion in the Legislative Council referred to above, the Government of India consulted all local Governments regarding the proposed enquiry into prison administration in India and found that opinion was unanimously in favour of such an undertaking. The result was the consent of His Majesty's Secretary of State to the appointment of a Committee of enquiry and the steps for the constitution of the Committee were in progress on the date of the outbreak of war. That event frustrated the method of the proposed enquiry outside India impossible and the project for appointing a Committee had to be for the time abandoned. Regrettable of the past five years has emphasized the necessity for this enquiry and the Government of India have now resolved, with the concurrence of the Right Hon'ble the Secretary of State, to take up the matter again. The Calendar of the University for 1918 is now under preparation. That portion of volume II of the Calendar relating to the alphabetical list of graduates is carefully revised from year to year by the University Office. The Registrar will be obliged to graduate and obtain the information in the following form, to enable the office to correct the list and bring it up to date.

The Registrar will be glad to receive information from time to time of the changes in the occupation of graduates. Such information when given should be as complete as possible so as to enable the office to amend the list correctly.
